

AN OLD SPORT IS THERE WITH ANOTHER STORY

The old sport appeared half asleep. He was sitting in a corner of the Nevada Club when a friend approached with the remark, "Old hoss, what seems to be the matter? you look as if you lost the best friend you ever had. Let's take a little nip, it might make things look brighter."

"I'll go you," said the old boy. "Don't you know I was just thinking of home and mother. The years have been many since I gazed on the face of her who gave me birth. Say, friend I will never see her again on this earth; she has passed away, but if in the after world acquaintances which we cherish here are to greet one another, I know of no one whom I would be prouder to greet than my good old ma."

"Come out of it," said the friend, "your are not usually in this frame of mind. Let's have something to drive away the blues."

"I suppose it isn't just proper to carry your sorrow beyond the limits of your domicile, but today as I sat in my cabin thinking of days that have gone I recalled experiences of other times where the bitter o'er shadowed the sweet. Believe me, the tears did unbidden flow. Tomorrow I am going to tell you of one in whom I had the greatest confidence and one who is dearer to my heart right now than anyone outside of my own with whom I ever came in contact. For the time being, however, I will forget the sad part and tell you of other men and other days."

"Yes, I remember, it was with you with whom I was talking the other day about Jim Townsend. Don't you know he was a great character. Like many others, he had a failing for whisky; he used to consume a great deal of the liquid in the course of a day. He had a room in a house in Virginia City owned by a woman who disbelieved in the drink habit. Jim was never very punctual with his rent, his earnings usually finding their way to the registers behind the bars of the liquid refreshment parlors. Early one morning he went home with an excellent bun on. In his endeavor to reach his apartments, he made no end of noise. The next day the landlady approached Jim with the remark that if he insisted on making so much noise in going to his room it would be compulsory upon him to move."

"My dear madam," said Jim, "you are undoubtedly referring to my entrance last night. I want to tell you this: if there is any man in this city who can carry a barrel of booze to my room with less noise than I did last night, I am perfectly willing to vacate these quarters."

"It always made me laugh to think of him. He wrote to old man Yerlington of the Virginia and Truckee railroad for a pass. Said he in his letter: 'In asking you for this transportation, I wish to call to your attention the fact that my paper has a world-wide circulation; it goes to Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia; if I do not get the transportation asked for the paper will go plumb straight to hell.'

"Do you know," continued the old sport, "that I feel better now. Have another on me. Make mine the same, Mr. Bartender."

"I was just thinking of something I saw and heard in the early days of Manhattan. Two Irishmen were drinking at the bar in the Stray Dog saloon. One of the Irishmen took occasion to remark to the other in a spirit of fun, that an Irishman was nothing more or less than a negro turned inside out."

"The Irishman addressed must have believed in the theorem that things equal to the same thing are equal to each other, for the words were no more than out of the lips of his friend when he said, 'My, what a great country this would be if they turned all the niggers inside out.'"

ELLEFORDS WILL BE GLADLY RECEIVED

W. J. Elleford takes pleasure in presenting his sterling company of players to Tonopah playgoers and begs leave to state that he has the best acting company this season that it has ever been his good fortune to present to theatergoers. The Elleford name is a synonym for all that is first class in the modern drama, clever people, there are sixteen in the Elleford company; popular plays, comprising, lively comedy, brilliant farce and pleasing melodrama, with beautiful costume and scenic effects, the Ellefords cannot fail to give satisfying performances. "The American Girl," which is the opening bill for these well known performers, is one of the really meritorious plays of recent years. It has proved its worth the past three seasons by entertaining hundreds of people and by earning a small competence for its author. The plot centers around the life of a beautiful southern girl, a true American "lady." It is rare indeed that one sees a play in which every character is true to life and free from the falsities of the dramatist's license. When such a play makes its appearance, it strikes the fancy at once and becomes a popular favorite. That is one of the secrets of the marvelous success of "The American Girl," the most delightful comedy-drama produced in the west in many seasons. Its fidelity to nature makes it a human interest play which appeals to the heart with its tender sentiment, its cleanly comedy, its freedom from long-fetched social epigram, and its natural plot. Miss Due is seen in the title role, and her work is delightful. Sophie and Gordon Osborn are the children of the play, "Prince Roy" and "Little Lady," give a performance that marks them at once as two of the cleverest youngsters in the profession. They also introduce novel singing and dancing specialties between acts. There are a number of other pleasing characters in the play. Mr. Elleford has added a great deal to his performances in the way of costume and scenic effect and each and every performance goes with snap and style. Other attractive bills are scheduled for the engagement and the prices are 25, 50 and 75 cents. The seat sale opens at Miners drug store this morning.

BONANZA STANDS CORRECTED.

The Bonanza stands corrected. In view of the fact that it is not the desire of this paper to do anyone an injustice, it is but right to state that this paper was in error yesterday when it stated that Bert Taylor of Goldfield was run over by the Simplex car driven by Shorty Kutzkau. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Taylor was hit by the Thomas car driven by Jim Jeffries. The responsibility for the accident will be brought to light when the matter is aired in the justice court on the third.
